

Report of rights abuses in Honduras

Maureen Fiedler | Sep. 11, 2009 NCR Today

Jean Stokan, Director of the Justice Team for the Sisters of Mercy of the Americas, provides a graphic description of gross human rights abuses in Honduras in her appearance on "Interfaith Voices" this week. She describes government forces trying to snuff out the protests of those who oppose the recent coup. Teachers, lawyers and campesinos were attacked in multiple and bloody ways as they demonstrated to restore the elected leader of Honduras, Manuel Zelaya, and the constitutional order of the country.

Jean was part of a delegation of religious people who visited Honduras in August on a trip sponsored by both the Quixote Center and the Sisters of Mercy.

To hear the interview, go to: www.interfaithradio.org [1]

Before this interview, you can hear the tale of Kevin Roose, a student who went undercover at Liberty University (founded by Jerry Falwell) to investigate evangelical culture. And after Jean's interview, you can hear about the great sounds of an interfaith choir called Mosaic/Harmony.

Source URL (retrieved on 01/28/2015 - 06:33): <http://ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/report-rights-abuses-honduras>

Links:

[1] <http://www.interfaithradio.org/>