

Boycott Arizona

Demetria Martinez | Apr. 27, 2010

Jan Brewer, Arizona's governor, has signed a law that will allow cops to pull over, question, and detain anyone they have a "reasonable suspicion" to believe is in this country without proper documents. This is racial profiling--a threat to all of our civil rights.

Latinos will be targeted as never before. The legislation potentially threatens church ministries, theoretically forcing those in ministry to ask for proof of residency before offering to take a group of people to church, to cite but one example. Groups around the country are calling for a national boycott of Arizona businesses, urging actions such as canceling conferences scheduled to be held in the state. To sign on to the boycott, check out the Latino advocacy group, Presente.org [1]
