

Anglicans name new Archbishop of Canterbury

Dennis Coday | Nov. 8, 2012 NCR Today

The new leader of the 77-million member Anglican communion is a former oil executive and hails from the traditional, evangelical wing of the church, reports the Daily Mail. See New Archbishop of Canterbury: Justin Welby, the oil executive who heard God calling [1]

The Daily Mail reported that "Theologically, [Welby] is unashamedly part of the evangelical tradition, upholding a more traditional and conservative interpretation of the Bible than some in the Church of England. But he is also a strong advocate of more modern styles of worship."

His family background is in whisky -- his father hobnobbed with the Kennedys [2].

Source URL (retrieved on 01/31/2015 - 10:37): <http://ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/anglicans-name-new-archbishop-canterbury>

Links:

[1] <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/religion/9663422/Justin-Welby-the-oil-executive-who-heard-God-calling.html>

[2] <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/religion/9662546/Justin-Welby-to-be-Archbishop-of-Canterbury.html>