

Wieseltier Spanks Obama and Hagel

Michael Sean Winters | Jan. 29, 2013 | Distinctly Catholic

Regular readers will know of the profound admiration I have for Leon Wieseltier and for his writings. His article at The New Republic [1]this morning challenges some of President Obama's foreign policy inclinations as well as those of Secretary-designate Chuck Hagel. The key sentences: "The merit of a view owes nothing to the biography of the individual who holds it, even if it confers a certain pathos. A chest full of medals hardly denotes a brain full of truths."

I suspect I am more suspicious of military intervention than Wieseltier, but it is refreshing to read a liberal, not a neo-con, making the case for American intervention in Syria.

Source URL (retrieved on 01/26/2015 - 10:53): <http://ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/wieseltier-spanks-obama-and-hagel>

Links:

[1] <http://www.newrepublic.com/article/112205/obama-doctrine-light-footprint-lightweight-thinking>