

Wieseltier on Boston Bombings (& So Much More)

Michael Sean Winters | Apr. 25, 2013 Distinctly Catholic

Leon Wieseltier, like Kinsley writing in the pages of the New Republic and, like Kinsley, one of those writers I wish I could write like, has this essay on our response to the Boston bombing [1]. The money quote: "We cling desperately to the illusion of our immunity, even after it has just been disproved by experience, and to the fiction of the pastness of the past: we call it 'closure,' which is just a decision not to care anymore, and not to let experience intrude any further."

Source URL (retrieved on 02/01/2015 - 02:42): <http://ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/wieseltier-boston-bombings-so-much-more>

Links:

[1] <http://www.newrepublic.com/article/113011/boston-massacre-and-our-emotional-efficiency>