

New York Times features late cardinal's Jewish ancestry

Tom Gallagher | Jun. 16, 2014 NCR Today

The New York Times has an interesting story [1] about the late Cardinal John O'Connor's Jewish heritage:

In his 16 years as the Catholic Church's top official in New York, Cardinal John Joseph O'Connor was a staunch friend and defender of the Jewish people.

He spoke often about what he had seen at Dachau as a Navy chaplain. He used his platform as head of the Archdiocese of New York to support Soviet Jewry, and played a role in the Vatican's recognition of the state of Israel. Mayor Edward I. Koch, a Bronx-born Jew who worked closely with the cardinal, proclaimed that he loved him "like a brother."

Yet there was something Cardinal O'Connor apparently never knew: His mother was born a Jew, the daughter of a rabbi.

"The basic fact is, my mother was Jewish," said Mary O'Connor Ward-Donagan, the cardinal's 87-year-old sister. Observing the Jewish matrilineal tradition, she added, "That means my two brothers were Jewish, my sister was Jewish and I am Jewish. Of that I am very proud."

Read the full story. [1]

Source URL (retrieved on 01/27/2015 - 23:42): <http://ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/new-york-times-features-late-cardinals-jewish-ancestry>

Links:

[1] <http://www.nytimes.com/2014/06/11/nyregion/cardinal-john-joseph-oconnor-jewish-mother-genealogy.html>