July 25 marks the 50th anniversary of the promulgation of Humanae Vitae, Pope Paul VI's 1968 encyclical banning artificial birth control. Penny Mordaunt, Britain's International Development secretary (a cabinet post), urged the Vatican to change its strict ban on the use of contraception, in a meeting with senior aides to Pope Francis last week.

NCR's Jamie Manson says though the vast majority of lay people and theologians (and a good number of clergy) have rejected the teaching, Humanae Vitae's ban on contraception causes suffering among those least able to ignore it.

Manson's piece is part of NCR's multipart series mapping the influence of Humanae Vitae, the impact this teaching has had in the Catholic community and where it might be pointing us in the future. 'Humanae Vitae': The maturing of church teaching

Some additional background: How the Catholic Church came to oppose birth control In 1968, Paul's declaration shocked many Catholic priests and laypeople. Conservative Catholics, however, praised the pope for what they saw as a confirmation of traditional teachings.

Some stories you may have missed from late last week:

- German Catholics' confusing attempt to allow Communion for Protestants A debate has gripped the country's Catholic Church, exacerbated by mixed signals from the Vatican.
- Episcopal convention approves a 'pastoral solution' on same-sex marriage Same-sex couples will now be able to marry in their home parish even if their local bishop has moral objections to gay marriage, Episcopal Church leaders decided July 13.
