

News

Thomas Plante (provided photo); Fr. Brendan McGuire (CNS)

by Dan Morris-Young

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

October 8, 2018

Share on BlueskyShare on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

A "powerful, new moment in the ongoing crisis" of sexual abuse and authority exploitation in the Catholic Church will be the focus of an Oct. 9 panel discussion at Santa Clara University.

Titled "The Catholic Church and the Catastrophe of Clergy Sexual Abuse," the noon event at the Jesuit university's de Saisset Museum will feature four panelists, including Thomas Plante, a former vice chair of the U.S. bishops' National Review Board on sexual abuse issues; and Fr. Brendan McGuire, a pastor in San Jose, California, who made national headlines last month when he revealed for the first time during a homily that he had been abused by a priest 35 years ago.

The approximately 90 minutes of presentations and open discussion will be livestreamed, according to Miriam Schulman, associate director of Santa Clara's Markkula Center for Applied Ethics, the event's lead sponsor.

Co-sponsors are the Ignatian Center for Jesuit Education and Santa Clara Campus Ministry.

The two other panelists are Santa Clara theologian Sally Vance-Trembath, who will address "needed changes" in church internal structures, and Jesuit Fr. Kevin O'Brien, dean of the Jesuit School of Theology.

Sally Vance-Trembath and Jesuit Fr. Kevin O'Brien (Provided photos)

In an unpublished opinion piece shared with NCR, Vance-Trembath stressed, "It will be important to finally actually listen to lay people. Let us not create a junk yard of re-invented wheels that are never attached to a single, working axel."

Consider closing "all the seminaries," she wrote. "Educate and form future pastoral leaders on college campuses. Sell the property. Use those proceeds to fund the education that will professionalize the parish staffs" with special attention to developing laywomen's roles.

A 2008-12 member of the National Review Board, Plante is the Augustin Cardinal Bea, SJ University Professor at Santa Clara. In addition to teaching psychology there, he is adjunct clinical professor of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at Stanford University School of Medicine.

"I think that the average Catholic wonders why the church can't get this right," Plante told NCR via email. "But sadly, news reports have been problematic and folks really don't seem to know a lot of good solid facts about this story."

Plante, also director of the Applied Spirituality Institute, pointed out, "The number of abuse cases since 1982-83 have dropped like a rock, and since 2002 they are really down to a trickle. There is less child abuse in the Catholic Church today than just about any other comparable organization."

"People often don't realize that [the \[Pennsylvania\] grand jury report](#) was very old news and doesn't reflect current practices and issues," he said.

"Overall, my sense from the bishops when I was on the National Review Board was that they wanted to get this right, of course," said Plante.

However, he added, "given our church structure and lines of authority, perhaps getting all the bishops to agree on something is a bit like herding cats. But overall, I really think that the Dallas Charter [for the Protection of Children and Young People], Essential Norms, and other policies and procedures put in place since 2002 have worked and worked well. Perhaps the missing piece is about bishop accountability and responsibility. It appears that is the last step to make these new policies and procedures more airtight."

Plante said his "biggest four concerns" are:

- The bishops' true openness to accountability; *
- How the church can regain trust and authority;
- Meaningful involvement of persons "who don't have Roman collars" in developing best practices;
- If the laity at this point will "listen to facts and embrace quality best practices in child protection and screening of adults with access to children rather than just react emotionally about this issue."

Advertisement

Jesuit School of Theology launched its own initiative on church sexual and authority abuse in late September, a resource page on its website called "Authentic and Lasting Reform."

The page will provide a space for exchange of ideas and information on the complex abuse and authority issues, according to a Sept. 26 introduction by O'Brien.

O'Brien invited "our extended JST family beyond campus to join us in this conversation," which the school hopes "will be a living reflection of our community's continued discernment and action."

Drew Roberts, Jesuit School of Theology's assistant dean for enrollment management and marketing, said in an email, "We have received a dozen or so responses from members of our extended community, which mostly express gratitude that JST is engaging the issues directly, faithful to our commitment as a Catholic and Jesuit theology center seeking to serve the church."

Submissions, Roberts wrote, "will be thoughtfully reviewed by my office and Fr. O'Brien."

[Dan Morris-Young is NCR's West Coast correspondent. His email is dmyoung@ncronline.org.]

This version has been updated to clarify quotes from Thomas Plante.*