

News

Basilian Fr. Thomas Rosica, pictured in a Jan. 15, 2019, photo, has resigned as president of Salt and Light Media following allegations of plagiarizing the written work of several authors in his lectures, blog posts and newspaper articles dating back several years. (CNS/Gregory A. Shemitz)

by Catholic News Service

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

Toronto — June 18, 2019

Share on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

Basilian Fr. Thomas Rosica, pictured in a Jan. 15, 2019, photo, has resigned as president of Salt and Light Media following allegations of plagiarizing the written work of several authors in his lectures, blog posts and newspaper articles dating back several years. (CNS/Gregory A. Shemitz)

Basilian Fr. Thomas Rosica has resigned as CEO of Salt and Light Catholic Media Foundation, the latest chapter in a scandal that has embroiled him since February.

Rosica, the founding CEO of the Canadian Catholic television network Salt and Light TV and a former Vatican media liaison, has faced allegations of plagiarizing the written work of several authors in his lectures, blog posts and newspaper articles dating back several years. He has admitted that he failed to properly credit sources in some of his writings and apologized for his mistakes.

He has been on sabbatical since March for "several months of rest and renewal."

"After 16 years as the founding Chief Executive Officer, I have submitted my resignation to the board of directors of the Salt and Light Catholic Media Foundation effective today," Rosica said in a June 17 statement. "It has been a great privilege to work closely with our founder, Gaetano Gagliano, his family and a dedicated board of directors on this media project. I am grateful for the young adults working with us who helped realize Gaetano's vision for Catholic television and media."

He went on to again apologize for claiming others' work as his own.

"I ask forgiveness for errors in not properly acknowledging individuals and attributing sources in my writings," he said.

When the scandal broke, Rosica said he never willfully plagiarized others and that he often relies on volunteers and colleagues to send him ideas that would become part of his lectures. He said he did not do the necessary checking into sources and took full responsibility for that oversight.

Tony Gagliano, chair of Salt and Light's board and son of Gaetano, thanked Rosica for his leadership since the network was born out of World Youth Day 2002 in Toronto, of which Rosica was national director. He said Salt and Light has been "a great gift" to the Catholic Church in Canada and beyond and will continue under the interim leadership of Alex Du, its chief operating officer.

"The involvement of many young women and men on our various media platforms has made a positive difference in the lives of many people around the world," said Gagliano. "We are grateful to Father Rosica for his leadership."

Salt and Light TV has grown beyond being a television network over its 16 years. It now offers services as a production house, has expanded into satellite radio, publishes a seasonal magazine and has launched a number of social media initiatives.

Advertisement

Rosica has held a number of high-profile positions with the Catholic Church and its entities, including English-language liaison at the Vatican summit on clergy sexual abuse in February and English-language media attache of the Holy See press office. When the scandal broke in February, Rosica tendered his resignation to a number of these entities, including the collegium of the University of St. Michael's College at the University of Toronto and the boards of the University of St. Thomas in Houston and St. John Fisher College in his hometown of Rochester, N.Y.

The Jesuits of Canada also withdrew an invitation for Rosica to receive its Magis Award for service to the church.

- - -

This story was compiled by the staff of The Catholic Register, Toronto.