It's an often overlooked corporal work of mercy. A Delaware priest organizes a parish campaign to write letters to inmates at a nearby maximum security prison.

Alpha, a program for parish evangelization founded in Anglican churches, gains a foothold in British Columbia, as Canadian Catholics seek ways to attract parishioners in an increasingly secularized society.

The divorce rate in Duval County, Florida, has declined by 28% over two years. As such stats go, the reasons are surely complex, but Newsweek columnist Lee Habeeb credits the intervention of Catholic parishes and other Christian congregations.

A "Mass Mob" offers support for troubled parishes in Buffalo, New York. The Mass Mob is a social media-inspired effort to get Catholics and others to show up at historic yet financially-distressed churches on particular Sundays. Now the effort is going beyond the city's troubled urban core into more affluent churches, a result, notes one writer, of the Buffalo Diocese's loss of trust due to the sex abuse crisis.
